It's the Holiday Season

I don't know what's with the Holiday Season. There is something about the season's message that changes people. Most of us, if not all of us, know that whenever the holiday season comes around, there is a different feeling in the air besides a cold breeze. There is a different atmosphere that we feel during this time of the year. People tend to be more giving, people tend to be friendlier, people tend to be more loving. It is different than the rest of the year. To me, based on experience, the holiday season transforms people into a better version of themselves. People who are stingy tend to be more generous. Those who are mean tend to be a little nicer. Many are open to sharing with strangers during the holiday season. However we see it, the message of the holiday season changes a person. Whether this be for a temporary basis or permanent, the season's message is transformational.
